FOOD MENU

THE HOUSE MENU FROM EARLIER TIMES

Well, mon cher, where are the dishes of yesteryear?
Back in the days when Constantin Tănase packed the theatres and Grigore Vasiliu-Birlic filled the halls with laughter, people indeed feasted! First came a hearty soup, clear as the honest face of a respectable clerk.
Then arrived the "bulz": rich, round, and satisfying enough to fuel a night of merriment.
And the "sarmale," mon cher, oh, the "sarmale"!
Wrapped with care, crafted like a Caragiale phrase: precise, deliberate, and flavorful.
In the end, the regal boiled meat platter ("rasol") took center stage, and the delicate veal brain unfolded on the palate like a clever idea that came to you late at night.
As for the wine, a glass of Fetească loosens the words and brings people closer.
Because that's how it was back then: generous tables and even more generous stories!

THE MENU AFTER MANY YEARS

In a quiet restaurant corner, an intellectual passionate about symbolism studies the plate before him as if it were a sacred text.
"Gastronomy," he muses, "is, at its core, a form of initiation. Once upon a time, food held a ritualistic dimension, where each meal told a mythological story. But today, everything takes on a new shape: textures become alchemical, plating becomes architecture, and taste… a revelation."
He brings his fork to the Parisian-style beef tartare, where the egg yolk and capers intertwine like echoes of forgotten symbols. "Tradition doesn't disappear; it transforms."
Then he takes a bite of the foie gras scented with Armagnac and smiles.
"The same story, only now told differently."
This intellectual could be Eliade himself, contemplating today's flavors as expressions of the sacred within the profane, reflecting on how modernity reinterprets and revives ancient traditions.

Our menu was crafted with care, memories, and a touch of mischief from the beginning to the last page. Some dishes come from long ago, from notebooks carefully kept in old drawers, while others wear a modern collar but carry an old soul.
At Casa Albă, cooking isn't just about skill; it's about emotion, comfort, and a beautiful way of saying "bon appétit."
So flip through, choose, taste.

Take your time as time pauses here, just enough to ask for one more serving.
